TYPES OF CAR INSURANCE COVERAGE

Liability Insurance	In Canada, liability insurance is mandatory for all drivers, but the minimum coverage amounts required vary by province. Liability insurance provides coverage for costs associated with property damage or injuries caused to others in the event of an accident. Additionally, it can protect drivers from costs related to lawsuits and legal defense if they are found liable for an accident.
Collision Coverage	Collision coverage typically covers damage to your car regardless of who is at fault, but it may not always cover medical expenses that may arise from the incident. Medical expenses may be covered by separate medical payment coverage or personal injury protection coverage. Additionally, collision coverage may also cover cases when vehicle damage is caused by hit-and-run incidents.
Comprehensive Coverage	Comprehensive coverage provides protection for car damage resulting from incidents that occur outside of auto accidents, such as theft, fire, vandalism, and natural disasters. It can provide peace of mind to car owners, knowing that their vehicle is protected in the event of an unforeseen occurrence.
Accident Forgiveness	It allows drivers to be insured for a certain amount of time without increasing their premiums due to any accidents that may occur. Accident forgiveness also helps to ensure that drivers are not penalized if they are not first at-fault accident allowing them to maintain a good driving record and continue enjoying lower insurance rates. With accident forgiveness, drivers can feel more secure and confident when they get behind the wheel, knowing that if something unfortunate happens, their insurance provider will still be there to help them out.
